MEET the grain

Walnuts are among the oldest tree foods grown by man. In fact, Walnuts are really nature's seed drop from the tree. Most of America's nut crops are grown in California's Central Valley within 150 miles of Fresno. Pacific Grain & Foods handles some varieties of conventional and organic nuts, like walnuts and almonds, from local growers, brokers, and processors that are stored and packaged in a separate facility. The walnut is among earth's unlimited nursery/food seed (sunflower/almond) varieties that can be sprouted, like grains (amaranth), beans (garbanzo/chickpea), spices (mustard), included in our current product line.

Walnut meats are immensely rich in nutrition and their benefits range from metabolism maintenance to heart health and beauty.

One-quarter cup of walnuts, for instance, provides more than 100 percent of the daily recommended value of plant-based omega-3 fats, along with high amounts of copper, manganese, molybdenum, and biotin. Some of the most exciting research about walnuts includes:
